Webinar: Helping Your Clients Find Location Affordability:

August 15, 2013 - Webinar: Helping Your Clients Find Location Affordability. Sponsored by HUD's Housing and Transportation Affordability Initiative. Affordable housing isn't just about what a household pays in rent or for their mortgage. It's also about where they live and how that impacts their transportation costs. Counselors play a critical role in educating clients about the issues they need to consider when looking for a place to live. You know that housing costs are the highest budget item for most low- to moderate-income families; what you may not know is that transportation costs are a close second. This means transportation costs are rarely considered when a family is deciding where to live; yet, these costs play a crucial role in the affordability of a home. The Location Affordability Index (LAI) and My Transportation Cost Calculator (MTCC) provide counselors and their clients the information they need to make informed decisions about where to live by providing key data on combined housing and transportation costs in their neighborhoods. This Webinar will explain how combined housing and transportation costs impact your clients and how you can use HUD's new tools to help your clients find affordable housing. The webinar will demonstrate the LAI and MTCC and highlight other resources available on the Location Affordability Portal and feature practitioners using similar tools in their community.
